Without the need to play them, Sam, Kevin and Rob have an unusual hobby: preparing attack-proof fools. The party gets it wrong when its most recent plan is stolen and taken away. Things get even worse by organising a robbery for him when they are approached by a man with an offer or going to jail. While the clock ticks, they find that risk may be more than just their own freedom. They have a few rules in the game, including the three that have the technical and physical skills necessary to accomplish the tasks necessary for the robbery, the plan cannot include loaded weapons, and no violence that means no one gets hurt. They try to be so meticulous if not more than the best high-stakes thieves. The fun is knowing they could do it if they really wanted to. Their collective lives change when someone walks into Sam's apartment and steals his latest plan for a jewelry warehouse. After the warehouse hit, the culprit identifies with them as Leo 'The Touch' Gillette, an acquaintance but never convicted high-stakes thief who will stop at nothing to get what he wants. He tells them that entering Sam's apartment was not by accident, and that part of his grand plan is ...
